HOW DID TWO HARVARD AUTHORS MAKE A DIFFERENCE IN INDIA?

Just ask the student from India who used DASH to access The Benefit of Power Posing Before a High-Stakes Social Evaluation by Amy Cuddy and Caroline Wilmuth (and co-author Dana Carney). Their working paper helped ease anxieties in his daily life.

Depositing your work in DASH (Harvard’s open-access repository) allows you to share and preserve your research. You can help those who may have limited resources but a great desire to learn.

Deposit your work in DASH and make your research accessible to a global audience.

You can make a difference.

DASH.HARVARD.EDU
HOW DID A HARVARD DOCTORAL STUDENT MAKE A DIFFERENCE IN THAILAND?

Just ask the faculty member from the University of Bangkok who used DASH to access Motorcycle Taxi Drivers, Mobility, and Politics in Bangkok by Claudio Sopranzetti. Claudio’s dissertation helped the city of Bangkok study the reuse of its ex-commercial and ex-industrial buildings.

Depositing your work in DASH (Harvard’s open-access repository) allows you to share and preserve your research. You can help those who may have limited resources but a great desire to learn.

Deposit your work in DASH and make your research accessible to a global audience.

You can make a difference.

DASH.HARVARD.EDU
HOW DID TWO HARVARD AUTHORS MAKE A DIFFERENCE IN BRAZIL?

Just ask the reader from Brazil who used DASH to access Identification of Autoimmune Gene Signatures in Autism by Isaac Kohane and Dennis Wall (and co-author J-Y Jung). Their article helped answer his questions about the relationship between Asperger’s syndrome and multiple sclerosis that he had experienced in his own life.

Depositing your work in DASH (Harvard’s open-access repository) allows you to share and preserve your research. You can help those who may have limited resources but a great desire to learn.

Deposit your work in DASH and make your research accessible to a global audience.

You can make a difference.

DASH.HARVARD.EDU