Where the Wild Books Are
Sept 1, 2013 progress report

Project update

On August 2, 2013, the Harvard Human Research Protection Program approved the Where the Wild Books Are (WtWBA) application to study human subjects. This approval is the result of months of work.

Given our recent approval, our study can finally begin. Next week, during the Law School’s Libraryfest, we will begin recruiting HLS students to the study.

Financial update

WtWBA has had no expenses since the last project report. This is expected. The project spent all the funds it needed to spend at the beginning of the project.
